

Here are a few interesting facts:-

The parishes of Sysonby and Eye Kettleby are rich in archaeological evidence about Melton's past going right back to the Stone Age. We also know a great deal about the history of the area, which clearly was very important for centuries.

1. The Melton Mowbray Navigation was built for broad beam barges, and the lock chambers are wider than usual. The Boat Inn, across Burton Street from the carpark, is a reminder that Burton End was the site of the old canal basin. Looking up Burton Street towards St. Mary's Church, the view has not changed very much from the days when boats carried coal, wool, wheat, oats, barley and manure from Leicester's stables. In 1808 there was a wharf at Priors Close west of the basin. It included a warehouse, a granary, malt offices, and a coal yard.
4. Egerton Park formed part of the landscaping around the house designed by Wyatt in 1829. A cricket pitch was laid out by the owner of Egerton Lodge, Lord Wilton, and he entertained teams from the MCC when two-day matches were played. It was the only private ground visited by the MCC in Leicestershire. County first class matches were played here in the 1940s.
8. Rhubarb Island was given its name because of the large plants with rhubarb-like leaves that grow all over it. This is Butter Bur, used as a medicine for the Plague according to Cupeper the 17th Century herbalist. It was also used to wrap butter pats to take them to market.
9. The Sewage Works were built in 1852 in Mr. Whittle's field to the west, avoiding the lands of the Lords Wilton and Palmerston, who had objected to the Works being built too close to their properties.
11. Sysonby Church. Near to the church part of a Roman coffin was found by the Melton Fieldworkers and in 1859, pagan Saxon burials were discovered which suggests that the site had religious significance before the coming of Christianity. The church was built in the 13thC. by Roger de Mowbray, Lord of Melton.
12. The Butts. The semi-circular area to the left of the footpath was set aside for the practice of archery. Able-bodied men were required to practise their skills every week. In 1613 Melton was fined 21 shillings for not having a pair of Butts, and the Sysonby Butts were thought to have been one of the pair they were forced to provide. 21 shillings would have been about £117 now.
13. Riverside Farm. The buildings on this site date from the 17thC and are listed. Beside the river is a moat fed by river water. This is recorded in the Sites and Monuments Records. It is probably a garden feature associated with the old Manor House, but it may be much older and been adapted from a moated farmhouse. The Yew trees on this site date from 1580.

Next to the river on a small area of gravel deposits was the old village of Sysonby or Sixtenby in the Domesday Book. Here archaeological excavations by the Melton Field Workers found evidence of human habitation in a three metre deep section starting with artefacts from the Stone Age and Bronze Age (c. 2500 BC) in waterlogged silt at the base, then Iron Age and Roman artefacts, and finally at the top, the last artefacts date to the Saxon/Norman period (900/1050AD).

There is no evidence of mediaeval habitation on this site, which must have been abandoned around the time of the Norman Conquest in 1066. The village moved on to the land which is now the Town Estate Golf Course which evidence shows was occupied from around 1100. It appears to have been deserted in the 16thC. The villagers may have been forced out by the Digby family who were Lords of the Manor.
